In2Scotland

With over 6,000 lochs and lakes and 6,200 miles of coastline, Scotland is full of beaches, coves, cliffs, and sea lochs. Loch Lomond, the largest expanse of freshwater in Great Britain, sits within The Trossachs; the first of Scotland's national parks, while the Cairngorms National Park boasts four of Scotland's largest peaks, including Ben Nevis.

Many of the ancient monuments, fortifications and burial chambers from Scotland's long history can still be seen today. Combined with the traces of more recent history in castles, statues, battlegrounds and architecture, looking at the history of Scotland is a fascinating perspective for the tourist or amateur historian. With so many thousands of years of human activity available layered one on top of another, there are few places in the world which can compare with Scotland for the breadth of history and the quality of the archaeological evidence.

If you are planning a holiday in Scotland let In2Scotland assist you in creating your perfect holiday or short break. Experienced travel consultants will tailor-make your holiday or short break to your requirements.
